SHADOWS OF COMING EVENTS.

A LONDON Sunday paper reputed to have its fingers in close proximity to the pulse of the Labour-Socialist Party, forecasts that within six months there will be a coalition government. Judging by the international and home outlooks it is more than possible that, long before six months a coalition or a national government, representative of all parties, may become desirable, if not necessary. Labour professes to be loath to form a coalition because of the Ramsey MacDonald debacle of 1931, but it may be asked, what do the Conservatives think of the new suggestion. At the last general election Labour scraped through with a tiny over-all majority. Since the general election they have managed to carry on without doing anything spectacular, except to enforce one or two nationalisation schemes which had been already on the stocks. If a general election were held in, say, March or April, it is not certain that Labour would come back with even the present majority. If war were to come it would be necessary to form a national government, and in that the Conservatives would be the dominating section, for they have a better team to deal with the crisis. It is possible that the prophecy of a coalition before six months have gone by is the result of wishful thinking. To the Labour leaders a coalition must appear at least the lesser of two evils, the other one being the eclipse of the Labour-Socialist Party for, perhaps, ten years.

Another announcement is that the United States may devaluate the dollar to the former exchange rate of 4.04 to the pound sterling. This rumour has been denied as without foundation. Yet, with its heavy commitments America may feel the strain of pegging the dollar at what is an unreal exchange rate. The sterling areas have done well in export business because of the low exchange value of the pound, which is really worth more than 2.80 dollars. No one need be surprised if, within the next six months, the dollar is put back to its old rate of 4.04 to the pound.

VALUABLE OLD DOCUMENTS.

OPERATIONS of the Land Purchase Acts and other enactments, as well as the vicissitudes of time, have rendered obsolete thousands of old legal documents — conveyances, leases, agreements, etc., etc., which, though now not required for showing titles, are of great historical value. A lot has been written about the eighteenth century "ascendancy" and the Penal Acts of Parliament passed in the early half of that period. But, in denouncing the penal laws Nationalist writers have not always presented a true picture of what really happened. Some three hundred members of Parliament enjoyed a sheltered life up in Dublin, and, periodically, they suffered from fits of nerves, which was not altogether surprising, seeing that most of them had forfeited estates on their consciences. Whenever a movement was suspected to restore the Stuart dynasty the holders of forfeited estates got scared, and passed another Act to repress Papistry, the real object being to entrench themselves in their new properties. It was not, however, what the new gentry did in the Dublin Parliament that shaped history so much as what people out the country did in observing or nullifying or evading the Acts of Parliament. We will not find full evidence of this in the Journals of either House of Parliament, though occasional glimpses may be traced in them. As every schoolboy is taught, Parliament enacted that the estate of a Papist could be seized by the first Protestant "discoverer." Some of our teachers of history do not seem to understand what a "discoverer" or a "discovery" meant in legal parlance, but that does not matter. Despite all that has been written and spoken on the subject, genuine "discoveries" seem to have been comparatively few, while fake ones were numerous. A Catholic estate owner who did not like the look of things decided to make them more secure for himself and his posterity. A Protestant relative or friend, a Protestant attorney who specialised in "discoveries" and knew how to get around them came to the rescue. A few years ago Rev. Professor Power, late of University College, Cork, came into possession of an obsolete deed which threw a clear light on procedure followed to nullify the law. A Catholic member of an old County Waterford family held a lease of property on terms outside the law. A genuine "discoverer" might benefit himself, but the leaseholder or his attorney knew how to forestall that possibility. They found a useful man of straw, probably a hanger-on of the man of law, to file a "discovery" in the Dublin courts. He duly obtained whatever title to the property the law allowed, the leaseholder admitting that the allegations against him were correct. The "discoverer" then solemnly assigned or conveyed the property to the attorney for a consideration of five shillings, and the latter re-assigned the leasehold to a county property-owner who had conveniently conformed to law regarding attendance at Church. The lawyer and the "discoverer" were Protestants. The friend (mayhap relative) who nominally acquired the Catholic's interest in the estate for ten shillings was a Protestant (of sorts) according to the law. His friend the Catholic remained in possession, and everybody ought to have been happy, including the members of Parliament in Dublin, some of whom would have been willing to participate in a similar wangle to help a friend out of a difficulty. The law was duly complied with in order to defeat it. That is only one example. There were probably hundreds of others. Other old documents should disclose various aspects of life in the eighteenth century. There is a positive danger that documents like the foregoing kept in country houses will disappear altogether unless something is done to get them into hands prepared to preserve them. Thousands of eighteenth century documents of no further practical use remain buried in solicitors' offices and in banks, overlooked or forgotten. These would help to throw light on the circumstances of life in a century about which much has been written and much remains to be corrected. Here and there members of the "ascendancy" tried to enforce the penal statutes, but generally these were defeated when fears of invasions by Jacobites subsided. The real set-up of social life in the eighteenth century would be more clearly seen if documents relating to leases and "discoveries" were available.

DEATH OF REV. W. R. R. MOORE.

The death occurred recently of the Rev. William Ryland Rainsford Moore, M.A., in a Dublin hospital. Deceased was Rector of Ballingarry, Ratnkeale, Co. Limerick, for a period of 14 years. He was instituted Rector of Ballingarry by his Lordship the Bishop of Limerick on October 28th, 1931, and retired on September 30th, 1947. During that period he made many friends and was highly respected by all who knew him. He was the youngest son of the late Stevenson Cuming Moore and Elizabeth Moore, St. Johns, Terenure, Dublin. Educated at Trinity College, he was ordained on December 22nd, 1889, at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, by his Lordship the Bishop, Right Rev. Fredk. Temple. He served as curate at Dundalk in 1901, and was appointed Rector of Cootehill, Co. Cavan, from 1904 until his appointment to Ballingarry in 1931. On his retirement he went to live with his son, Rev. E. F. Moore, Ph.D., Rector of Greystones.

DUBLIN LETTER

74 Grafton St.,
Sunday Night.

ROLL UP, JOIN UP.

An all out campaign for greatly increased membership is being embarked upon by the Irish Red Cross Society. The main reason for the recruiting drive is the threat of war and its attendant disasters. If such times should unfortunately befall us the Society want to be able to fulfil its obligations to the community, but unless it has a large and active membership it cannot do so. To encourage people all over the country to join the Society meetings are to be held in Dublin, Cork, Limerick, Galway, Kilkenny, Sligo, Athlone, Cavan, Dundalk, Clonmel and the speakers will include public representatives, church dignitaries and prominent citizens in various walks of life. Members of the Executive of the Society will also add their voices. There are two courses open to volunteers. One is to join the local branch of the Society, enrol and train in voluntary aid division for service with the defence forces and the alternative is to train in a first aid division for work with the civilian casualty service in an emergency.

HAVEN OF PEACE.

There is something detached and "out of this world" about St. Stephen's Green Park. One may only hurry through it as a short cut, but nevertheless the leisurely atmosphere infects one immediately. Everything is calm and peaceful and one would hardly realise that it is in the centre of a busy city. Like all public parks it produces some peculiar insights on human nature. What, for instance, was the man with the large bag of stale bread thinking about this morning as he fed about thirty or forty voracious sea gulls, while the quiet peace loving, but hungry ducks could not even have a peck. The gull feeder appeared eminently satisfied with his efforts, however, and was patently oblivious of the fact that he had become the centre of at least twenty or thirty pairs of curious eyes. Everyone, except the ducks, was amused. Trouble and strife, strikes and wars are forgotten in the park.

"ROLL OUT THE BARREL"

A motorist who drove some hundreds of miles to the South of Ireland and returned to Dublin over the week-end, said that he had overtaken a most unusual collection of motor lorries, all the property of hauliers and business firms from all parts of the country. "You would think," he said, "that they would be carrying flour, coal and other much-needed supplies in view of the restrictions caused by the transport dispute, but that wasn't the case at all. Nearly every one of them was loaded with stout or porter barrels, empty or otherwise." He thought it an amazing commentary on a country which, in view of all that had been said, appeared to be running short of essential supplies, that so much priority should be given to the transport of beer and stout.

CONSUELO ALBA

Consuelo Alba is the name of the vivacious Spanish dancer in the Christmas review starring Jimmy O'Dea at the Gaiety. She is Spanish-looking, and her dancing possesses the fire and feeling of Spain, but she is not Spanish. This lady who so expertly uses the castanets is Australian born. Her father was English, but she probably inherits her beautiful Latin features from her Spanish mother. She did, however, learn her dancing in Spain, but was also trained in London. Her off-stage name is Stephanie Edye and, strange to relate, she can claim to have some Irish blood, for a grandmother in Australia was a Kelly. Dublin audiences love her dancing and hope that her first visit here will not be her last.

MOIRA SHEARER TO CO-STAR WITH DANNY KAYE

Miss Moira Shearer, the Sadlers Wells ballet dancer, is to co-star with Danny Kaye in a £1,000,000 technicolour film based on the life of Hans Andersen, the Danish writer of fairy tales, it was announced in New York. Mr. Samuel Goldwyn signed Kaye for the part before Mr. Goldwyn left Hollywood for New York on Saturday, the Goldwyn office said. "The picture will have Moira Shearer star of the film 'The Red Shoes' as Kaye's co-star," it stated.

Several of the Danish author's fairy tales will be interpreted by Miss Shearer in ballet and by Kaye who will play the role of Andersen. He is due to appear at the London Palladium for eight weeks beginning May 7th.—Reuter.

OBITUARY.

MR. MICHAEL J. WALSH.

There was a very large attendance at the funeral at Bandon during the week of Mr. Michael J. Walsh, South Main St., Bandon, and late of Rathroom. Mr. Walsh was a brother of the late Mr. J. J. Walsh, T.D., and Postmaster-General.

MR. J. D. HARNETT.

Mr. James D. Harnett, whose death took place at his residence in Abbeyfeale at the age of 80 years, was probably the last of the older generation of Irish journalists who reported the great Land League and Plan of Campaign meetings and the eviction scenes in West Limerick in the days when a famous Parish Priest of Abbeyfeale, Fr. William Casey, led the tenantry in the fight for justice against landlordism. The late Mr. Harnett was a brilliant journalist, and represented Dublin and Cork daily papers, as well as the local Press of Limerick and Kerry for 60 years. A man of fine literary taste and possessing a flair for historic work, his contributions to various journals helped greatly to preserve the historic traditions of his native town and district.

The late Mr. Harnett was brother of the late Very Rev. Dr. R. A. Harnett, C.S.Sp.

DISTINGUISHED CORKMAN

Death Of Mr. M. O'Driscoll, S.C.

Sincere regret will be occasioned by the announcement of the death which took place at St. Vincent's Hospital, Dublin, on Saturday, of Mr. Michael O'Driscoll, S.C.

Son the the late Mr. and Mrs. John O'Driscoll, Kilcrea House, Co. Cork, he had a brilliant scholastic career and took first place in Ireland in the Junior, Middle and Senior Intermediate grades. His early education was at Reengroige National School, Baltimore; Farren National School; the Christian Brothers School, Sullivan's Quay, Cork; and at Farranferris, Cork. In 1923, when graduating B.A. of the National University, he again had the distinction of taking first place in Ireland, and in 1927 he was called to the Bar, having been awarded the Brooke scholarship. He was awarded the Gold Medal for oratory at King's Inns. For nearly 20 years he practised in Cork until his call to the Inner Bar in 1945. He was a brother of Dr. B. J. O'Driscoll, Central Hospital, Galway; Mr. J. O'Driscoll, Farran; Mr. T. O'Driscoll, Mrs. Heskin, Midleton; and Mrs. Maurice O'Keeffe, Skibbereen.

From his early days in Cork as a junior, Mr. O'Driscoll rose rapidly in the estimation of legal practitioners as an advocate of exceptional ability well versed in forensic knowledge and court procedure. In fact, before he commenced practice in Cork, while he "devilled" at the Four Courts with Mr. M. Binchy, S.C., that eminent Co. Cork lawyer had already forecast for his junior a prominent career at the Bar. He was eagerly sought after by solicitors and, during his practices on the Munster Circuit, he was engaged on one side or the other in all big cases which came before the Cork Circuit Court Judges from the days of the late Judge Mathew Kenny, before whom he had pleaded as a young barrister. Meantime, he was frequently engaged to act as junior on Cork cases in the High Court.

Practically every Circuit Court Judge before whom he appeared in Cork complimented him on the manner in which his case was presented, while visiting judges from the High Court also expressed similar sentiments on more than one occasion.

Since being called to the Inner Bar in 1945, Mr O'Driscoll practised in Dublin.

He was for many years prominently associated with the public life of Cork City, as a member of Cork Corporation and subsidiary bodies. A leading member of the Fine Gael Party he stood in that interest as a candidate in the Cork City by-election of 1946, being narrowly defeated. He was also a candidate in the 1948 General Election standing on that occasion for the South Cork constituency.

A representative gathering was present at SS. Peter and Paul's Church, Cork, last evening, on the arrival of the remains by road from Dublin.

The chief mourners were:—Dr. B. J. O'Driscoll, Messrs. John and Timothy O'Driscoll (brothers); Mrs. R. Heskin and Mrs. M. O'Keeffe (sisters); Dr. R. Heskin, Mr. M. O'Keeffe, Mrs. B. J. O'Driscoll, Mrs. J. O'Driscoll, Mrs. T. O'Driscoll, and Mrs. E. Goggin (relatives).

AN APPRECIATION.

A Colleague writes:—

Michael O'Driscoll has been called from the Inner Bar. Almost apologetically I accept the request to offer on behalf of his colleagues at the Bar this last tribute to his memory for he moved more often and more intimately among others of his fellows on the Munster Circuit. I am consoled, however, by the feeling that recruits even more recent to the Circuit than the writer are as intimately aware of his fine qualifications as a barrister, and his lovable attributes as a friend as are those who had constant contact with him from the King's Inns period. Michael's career was of that enduring nature which lived on from day to day in the heart and memory of his intimates, and, through their stories and anecdotes, will remain a familiar thing even to those who come to the Bar in later years. He joins among the unforgettable such remarkable figures as the late Jack Fitzgerald and the late James Meagher, and, even though it is painful to consider Michael's name in conjunction with the preface, "the late," his colleagues must be permitted the gloomy satisfaction made available by the knowledge that there has lived among them, sharing their problems and comradeship of the Bar-room, one whose name will of certainty be included in that elect coterie which has made the Munster Bar famous not alone in Ireland but far beyond the confines of this island.

The Corkman in him was illustrated less than a month ago, when, from his bed in a Dublin nursing home, he expressed the nostalgic desire to spend Christmas in Cork—a wish which he qualified by admitting that he supposed his condition of health would not permit him to travel to his native county. Even at that stage he was aware that his illness had intimations of mortality, but he characteristically and philosophically expressed himself on this by saying that he would either get better or do the next best thing for his colleagues by creating a vacancy in an overcrowded profession. That the vacancy he foresaw has been created is a melancholy circumstance which will be sincerely regretted by his brethren at the Bar, solicitors in Cork City and County and further afield, and those many thousands who had the pleasurable experience of association with him in his extensive practice.

Whilst it is mainly as an ornament to the legal profession that Michael O'Driscoll will be remembered he did not confine his talents completely to the study of his beloved Common Law and — with him — the less favoured Equity. His facility for deep thought, his classical education, and his multitarious studies inclined him deeply towards a course of action which, in his appreciation of the affairs of his country, most favoured the liberty of the individual and freedom of speech and thought. He was, from his earliest days, a constant supporter of Mr. W. T. Cosgrave's regime, and in days when such views were not unattended with considerable inconveniences he appeared on public platforms all over Cork City and County on behalf of his chosen party. Fellow sympathisers who had occasion to appear before the courts in the early half of the nineteen thirties found in him a tireless and competent advocate, and in later years they were pleased to be of some not inconsiderable assistance to Michael when he was chosen on different occasions as Parliamentary candidate on behalf of Fine Gael for Cork City and South Cork. His untiring good humour through such campaigns is still remembered gratefully by both the local and central organisations of a party which always enjoyed his unstinted effort on its behalf, and his unfailing good humour in adverse as well as happy political vicissitude remains to encourage those who followed the same convictions in good days and bad. Even those who appeared on opposing platforms found in him a disposition free from the slightest blemish of vindictiveness or envy, and they, in addition to the host of other friends who mourn the untimely passing of a remarkable figure, will subscribe to the valedictory benediction which Mother Church addressed to the spirit flown from the body: "May Perpetual Light shine upon him."

Sunday Night.

Young Irishwomen as Birmingham Grippies.

I am told there is a considerable exodus of girls from Eire to become conductors on buses in England. A town where they are much in request is Birmingham. Every month forty young women from all parts of Ireland answer advertisements, are sent details of the work, a pamphlet on Birmingham, and a ticket for an interview at the city's Dublin recruiting office. Thirty out of every forty—among them farm girls and typists—sign on for £4 10s. a week, a free ride by boat and train to Birmingham, and a blue uniform and beret.

Derivation of the "Pilgrims."

The powerful agency for welding American and English feeling, The Pilgrims, derives its name from the Puritan emigrants who sailed from Plymouth on the "Mayflower" in September, 1620, to found the Plymouth Colony. The "Pilgrims" to-day, British and American, are, however, not in the least Puritanical, and have a great tradition of hospitality and geniality. The United States Ambassador, Mr. Walter Gifford, will speak at the dinner which The Pilgrims are giving in his honour on Tuesday. It will be his first public speech in this country.
