

to he emigrated to Palestine in 1946.

With his equally devout son, Solomon, he lived in an austerly furnished house in a Tel Aviv suburb. Solomon, who steadfastly refused to discuss his sister, has been a teacher of history in the Mikve Isreal Agricultural School near Tel Aviv.

When the Rabbi became seriously ill, Solomon reluctantly set out for Bucharest, to tell his sister. He was in Bucharest when death came to his father. A cable was sent to him several days ago that his father's death was near, and he is expected back by Sunday.

The Rabbi had not seen his daughter since he left Rumania, after being escorted to the border by guards provided by Ana.

RICHARD W. WOLFE

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CHICAGO, March 30—Richard W. Wolfe, former Commissioner of Public Works and for more than fifty years active in the business and civic life of Chicago, died today in South Chicago Community Hospital. He was 84 years old.

Mr. Wolfe had been retired for more than thirty years. He dropped his active business career in 1914 when the late Mayor William H. Thompson appointed him Building Commissioner. He was also a member of the city's original zoning committee.

As Commissioner of Public Works, Mr. Wolfe was credited with having begun the straightening of the Chicago River and having built a water filtering plant for the city.

Born in Althea, Ireland, he came to the United States as an immigrant youth in 1885. He was a descendant of Gen. James Wolfe, conqueror of Quebec.

last was reported in Siberia, a Russian captive after World War II.

Hsun once was Prince Regent of China. The Nationalist news agency said he virtually starved to death after the Reds seized his properties and cut off his income. It did not say when he died.

Prince Hsun, or Prince Chun in the old spelling, became Regent in August, 1908, when Pu Yi was 2½ years old. He abdicated at the end of 1911, and his son followed him into retirement on Feb. 12, 1912. The passing of the Manchu dynasty and the birth of the Chinese Republic date from this period.
